Life in Black and White

A solo exhibition featuring black-and-white photos captured by Zhou Ming is underway at Hwa's Gallery. Zhou, a professor in photography at Shanghai Normal University, started to take pictures in the mid-1980s. He has been enamored in the world of black and white with a focus on urban life. At this exhibition, Zhou rearranged and collaged some of his works that render a surrealist feel. From those empty or mundane scenes, he tries to conjure up a striking contrast between an inner indifference and an outside chaos.
Date: Through September 1, 10am-5pm
Address: 534 Hengshan Rd

PICK OF THE DAY

French sculptor's witty take on animals

FRENCH artist Daniel Daviau's signature style, which integrates the body shapes of different animals, translates his ideas into a gentle and witty expression.
His works are now displayed in Shanghai through August 24. The two-part show at two separate venues features up to 40 sculptures.
For example, he gives the hippopotamus a sweet, gentle, well-intentioned appearance that children want to embrace, while the rhinoceros under his brush appears warrior-like.

For example, he gives the hippopotamus a sweet, gentle, well-intentioned appearance that children want to embrace, while the rhinoceros under his brush appears warrior-like.
Animals have always been an important theme in the history of art - from the vivid single-line depictions of France's prehistoric Lascaux Caves to the subjective imageries of animals in the medieval era and the groundbreaking animal-oriented creations during the Renaissance.
Since the 19th century, France has been home to many animal art masters who have brought new possibilities to the theme.
The outbreak of World War I compelled great masters, such as Ettore Bugatti and Françoise Pompon, to further break traditions and start to portray the sensitivity and fragility of animals.
Standing on the shoulders of his predecessors, Daviau attempts to depict the characteristics of different animals with his unique language and humor.

Through the hidden human perspective in the works, he challenges the viewer to ponder over the role of people in the natural environment and animal survival, raising concerns for a more balanced world.
In an attempt to present the most complete Daviau to a Chinese audience, "Part I - Galerie Dumontell" consists of non-monumental works reviewing the artist's career in the past three decades - from his early works to the most recent golden snub-nosed monkey specially dedicated to the Chinese audience.
Among the six monumental pieces in "Part II - Xiyunlou," the beloved "Hippo" series including "Hippopotamus" (2013), "Barnaby" (2017) and "Titipo" (2016) will be exhibited as a complete series for the very first time.
